- What can one say about this sci-fi classic? Bradbury's writing is powerful and at times nerve wracking as he takes us through fireman Montag's conversion from a book burning drone to one who wants to read and preserve them. Through his almost stream of consciousness writing, his edgy use of adverbs which create powerful images, Bradbury builds the suspense and action at a breakneck speed. Bradbury is prophetic in characterizing how modern technology can turn humans into mindless, manipulated morons. The TV screens surrounding the typical home in the novel are eerily familiar to the way reality shows today envelop the minds of their viewers, making them obsess on meaningless and mindless things like which rich wife yelled at whom, while those in power create and manipulte the world for us for their own ends.
