After decades of stability from the 1920s to the early 1970s, the rate of imprisonment in the United States has increased fivefold during the last four decades. The U.S. penal population of 2.2 million adults is by far the largest in the world. Just under one-quarter of the world's prisoners are held in American prisons. The U.S. rate of incarceration, with nearly 1 out of every 100 adults in prison or jail, is 5 to 10 times higher than the rates in Western Europe and other democracies. The U.S. prison population is largely drawn from the most disadvantaged part of the nation's population: mostly men under age 40, disproportionately minority, and poorly educated. Prisoners often carry additional deficits of drug and alcohol addictions, mental and physical illnesses, and lack of work preparation or experience. The growth of incarceration in the United States during four decades has prompted numerous critiques and a growing body of scientific knowledge about what prompted the rise and what its consequences have been for the people imprisoned, their families and communities, and for U.S. society. The Growth of Incarceration in the United States examines research and analysis of the dramatic rise of incarceration rates and its affects. This study makes the case that the United States has gone far past the point where the numbers of people in prison can be justified by social benefits and has reached a level where these high rates of incarceration themselves constitute a source of injustice and social harm. The Growth of Incarceration in the United States examines policy changes that created an increasingly punitive political climate and offers specific policy advice in sentencing policy, prison policy, and social policy. The report also identifies important research questions that must be answered to provide a firmer basis for policy. This report is a call for change in the way society views criminals, punishment, and prison. This landmark study assesses the evidence and its implications for public policy to inform an extensive and thoughtful public debate about and reconsideration of policies.

The criminal justice process is dependent on accurate documentation. Criminal justice professionals can spend 50-75% of their time writing administrative and research reports. Report Writing for Criminal Justice Professionals, Fifth Edition provides practical guidance—with specific writing samples and guidelines—for providing strong reports. Much of the legal process depends on careful documentation and the crucial information that lies within, but most law enforcement, security, corrections, and probation and parole officers have not had adequate training in how to provide well-written, accurate, brief, and complete reports. Report Writing for Criminal Justice Professionals covers everything officers need to learn—from basic English grammar to the difficult but often-ignored problem of creating documentation that will hold up in court. This new edition is updated to include timely information, including extensive coverage of digital reporting, updates on legal issues and privacy rights, and expanded coverage of forensics and scientific reporting.

Introduction to Criminal Justice Routledge

Victims of crime may experience a wide variety of traumas that result in physical, sexual, financial, psychological, emotional, and/or social consequences. While the types of trauma can vary greatly and include lesser-known forms such as vicarious and secondary trauma, identifying and recognizing victims can be complicated. Throughout this book, experts and professionals from academia and the fields of criminal justice, social work, and mental health acknowledge victims historically overlooked by society, political movements, the media, and/or the criminal justice system - we acknowledge the invisible victims. Invisible Victims and the Pursuit of Justice: Analyzing Frequently Victimized Yet Rarely Discussed Populations pioneers the assertion that our view of victims needs to be more inclusive by exploring invisible victims that are rarely, if ever, a focus of discussions in traditional victimology textbooks. To educate the reader and begin working toward positive change, each chapter identifies an invisible victim and provides the background, controversies, issues, solutions, and areas of future research. It is crucial to identify these gaps in the field as some of the most victimized populations remain absent from important dialogue on crime victims. This book is appropriate for a wide range of readership including but not limited to criminologists, victim service providers, psychologists, sociologists, social workers, advocate groups, law enforcement, lawyers, defense attorneys, criminal justice practitioners, academicians, researchers, and students studying criminology, criminal justice, victimology, social work, psychology, and social justice.

This study investigated relationships of locus of control and anxiety, with autogenic training, biofeedback, and guided imagery in a female prison population. It was hypothesized that training in these treatment modalities would increase internal locus of control and decrease state anxiety. Also hypothesized was the need for psychotropic medication would decrease, as would Institutional incident reports. The sample consisted of 86 female inmates from the Federal Correctional Institution in Pleasanton, California. The treatment program was conducted twice. In each running four groups formed: autogenic training, biofeedback, guided imagery, and control. Treatment subjects received eight weekly 60-minute sessions with the treatment modality of their group. All groups were administered Levenson's "IPC Scale" (1981) for locus of control scores, Spielberg's "State-Trait Anxiety Inventory" (1968), and a self-report questionnaire. Instruments were administered as a pretest, a posttest, and a second posttest eight weeks later. Treatment modalities were found to have an effect on locus of control and anxiety level of subjects. Also effected was the perceived health of each individual. It appears that biofeedback, followed by guided imagery, is the more effective treatment. Autogenic training appears to have had little effect in this study. Biofeedback groups had a reduction of both state and trait anxiety. Increase in "Internal" locus of control and decrease in "Powerful Others" during treatment was seen. "Chance" scores increased after treatment. Physical health symptoms decreased. The degree treatment helped these symptoms was significant. Guided imagery groups had a reduction in state and trait anxiety. "Powerful Others" orientation decreased during treatment. The degree of stress and stress related problems decreased with treatment. Increased internal locus of control was found to a significant degree in only the biofeedback group during treatment. Inconclusive results were found with incident reports and administration of psychotropic medication as insignificant numbers of the sampling received either. This study found that biofeedback and guided imagery as treatment methods have positive effects on female inmates. Continuing treatments alone could benefit the population. Effects of combining treatments may be even more pronounced. Research in combining treatment modalities is called for.
