REVIEW OF CGP CALIFORNIA ALGEBRA I HOMEWORK BOOK CGP EDUCATION

- If you want to learn methods and principles that use momentum and specific volume/price trends then this book is it. I try to read it at least once every few months. Nick Darvas showed everyone you don't have to babysit your stocks. He was written up in Time magazine about his documented success. According to Darvas, you only need to find the best handful of stocks with all time highs. After carefully you screen all stocks for a few important characteristics then you begin to track them to watch their pattern. When the pattern is established per rules you set a stop buy to buy them at a certain price level per the rules. You use stops to keep your losses less than 10% per stock if the upward trend has a substantial correction.

If you diversify into 3 stocks your risk is less than 4% of your principal. I don't agree with his use of margin esp. for people with less than 2 years experience with these rules and framework. Get this book. Read this book and heed his advice. If you are not disciplined, want to get rich quick, don't or won't follow rules because you know better, or want to stare at a computer screen every hour to check your gains/losses this is not the method for you.

- The Bean Trees attempts to address so many vital issues: adoption, class and race, youth, feminism, yet these remain a shallow, new-age background. When Taylor finally appears to break down under the pressure of young motherhood, it rings false, her switch from bravado to frustration lacks depth and disappears as quickly as Kingsolver's references to the war in Guatemala.
