REVIEW OF ACI COMMITTEE 544 AMERICAN CONCRETE INSTITUTE

- This is a great book filled with incredible surprises. It is definitely one of Gary Paulson's best works. It is about a thirteen-year-old boy named Mark who goes on a solo camping trip on a missile range. Mark is transported to another world which is savegely populated with stange animals that are different combanations of different animals. At first Mark thinks it is another world and there are no other humans. But he meets many tribes of humans. These humans, different from humans like mark are also smaller than he is. Mark gets through his teenage years first as a slave, then as a hero, then a lover and finishes a warrior. The only thing I didn't like about this book is that the book jacket says he finds startiling powers. These are not the powers you think they are, but you'll have to find out for yourself. This is a great book-- one of the best ever!

- As many other reviewers have noted, it takes some effort to deal with this book's old English style of prose. But, what do you expect? The book was written several hundred years ago! Once you get used to it, this novel is really very interesting and just gets progressively better as it goes on. By the end you can't put it down, you just have to know what happens to Moll. I thought Defoe offered very perceptive insights into human nature in sometimes very amusing passages. The novel has this curious aspect in that throughout the novel Moll displays a deep degree of moral self-awareness but then she has this ability to essentially ignore the impact of her often outrageous behavior. I guess this was Defoe's point. We all have to rationalize our actions to some degree to make our way in an imperfect and often cruel world. You will cheer and abhor her at the same time but at least she won't bore you!
