REVIEW OF INCODER INDUCTIVE ANGLE

ENCODER INDUCTIVE ENCODER

- Interesting book; read it in high school some 60+ years ago and to see some of his fiction become a reality is amazing.
- For anyone who is remotely interested in politics, reading Brave New World is a must. Published in 1932 when the world's most powerful rulers were often totalitarian in nature, Huxley examines the possibility of a society that is so controlled by the government that the very concept of choice is taken from the people. In an attempt to "save" him from a "meaningless" life, John the Savage is uprooted from his wilderness home on a 'Savage Reserve' and transplanted to London, where he is thrust into dystopian society, and all that it entails. He soon finds himself in love with Lenina Crowe, a sexually-liberated woman who is so societally conditioned to "free-love" that she cannot understand the foreign, chaste mentality which with John thinks. John frequently quotes Romeo and Juliet in her presence in order to describe her beauty; however, she does not understand because such literature as Shakespeare has long been banned by the state. He desires marriage, which is a foreign concept to her society, and she desires free-love because this is all she knows. Ultimately, this lack of sexual consensus destroys their relationship. As a result of John's opposition to the way in which the government is run, John challenges the World Controller, Mustapha Mond, and claims that the current method of government cannot possibly be the answer to society's problems. Mond counters, "We prefer to do things comfortably." To which John replies, "But I don't want comfort! I want God, I want poetry, I want real danger, I want freedom, I want goodness. I want sin" (240). When John attempts to flee from this oppression once and for all, he realizes that he has only one option which will allow him to truly escape his societal chains. Huxley paints a haunting portrait of a society in which the advancement of science negatively affects the lives of its individuals, as opposed to advancing them. He writes to discourage highly-centralized, totalitarian governments, for the nationalistic radicals he observed in his lifetime (the Bolsheviks, Fascism, Hitler, Stalin) all had devastating affects on the world. In Brave New World, the members of each caste are conditioned to love their given roles in life, for as Huxley states: "A really efficient totalitarian state would be one in which the all-powerful executive of political bosses...control a population of slaves who do not have to be coerced, because they love their servitude." This plays into the idea of eugenics and "bottled babies," because each caste must not only be societally conditioned, but genetically predisposed for the conditioning as well. The surprise ending of the novel is an interesting twist, and further reinforces the ideological clashes between John and the dystopian society. Although some of Huxley's predictions have not materialized, as you close the last page of the novel, you will find yourself wondering just how far off he really was in the majority of his predictions. For in terms of government, in the immortal words of Huxley himself, "You pays your money and you takes your choice."
