- Finally!! After reading The Pelican Brief years ago, I dove into the world of Grisham. I read The Street Lawyer, The Partner, The Chamber, The Testament, The Rainmaker, The Runaway Jury, The Firm, and then I started in on the newer ones. Was I ever disappointed! I wanted the Grisham I enjoyed so much from before. Where was he? What is this stuff he was putting out? It was not the Grisham I enjoyed. So, I gave up on him. My wife picked this up at a garage sale for 50 cents, so I gave it a whirl. Finally, back to the classic Grisham. Not his best work, but it is a start back in the right direction. I enjoyed the book, the characters, the story, the familiar town. A good story of people and life in the ever changing south in the 70's. If you want a dose of classic Grisham, give this a try and we'll all hope he continues back to what we all loved him for in the beginning.

- Smith has interviewed twenty-three recipients of the Medal of Honor, and coupled the edited interviews with brief scene-setting passages describing the war and the individual's circumstances. Official citations are appended. Acts for which the Medal was awarded occurred in WWII, Korea, and Vietnam. Some of the names are familiar-Senators James Stockdale, Daniel Inouye, and Bob Kerry. Most are little-known. They are of varied races, education, and background. Some are eloquent, as is Sen. Kerry on patriotism, guilt and redemption; others are blunt and inarticulate. The one common thread is that they generally consider themselves to be ordinary men who rose to an occasion they did not seek. Several make the point that they are not "winners," since in no sense did they compete for the Medal: they prefer to refer to themselves as recipients of an award. Smith was an editor of Parade Magazine, and his analysis never rises above that level, but the stories of the recipients are powerful in themselves.
