REVIEW OF CHAPTER 3 SCIENTIFIC MEASUREMENT PRACTICE PROBLEMS ANSWERS

- In her foreword, award-winning poet Nikki Giovanni urges readers to remember that: We need poetry... We deserve poetry. We owe it to ourselves to recreate ourselves. And find a different if not better way to live. Writers Corps has been bringing poetry and literacy to at-risk youth in Bronx, NY, Washington D.C. and San Francisco since 1994. The poems in this collection show some of the writing exercises used and vivid examples of excellent poetry from many of the youths in the program. Anyone interested in writing should begin with this book. The exercises invite creative expression through a writing journal, imagining oneself in a room and describing feelings, among other activities. While writers will find plenty to inspire them, reading through the poetry from the Writerscorps teens will leave no one untouched. Stories of pain leap from the carefully chosen words of poetry in titles about immigration, fights and abuse. Also strong are examples of hope, celebration of nature, friends and life. Everyday tales of hip-hop shoes, friends, jazz and dirty hands are also included. It's all there. From the title poem by Delia Garcia, San Francisco: Can you see the face telling you paint me happy, Paint me with life, but most of all Paint me free. --- Reviewed by Amy Alessio

- Stuart Woods has made a great novel about Hollywood in the 1930's and I can see this as a "film noir" but in a novel. The main character is a a policeman who quits the force before being fired man named Rick Barron. He sees a car accident and one of the drivers is a famous Hollywood actor named Cleve Barrow who is a self-admitted alcoholic. Barron wisely decides to inform a big producer instead of his superiors and thus begins a career in Hollywood for former Policeman Barron. Barron is hired by "Centurion Studios" Vice President and is set up to be Chief of Security and later a producer. Along the way he makes enemies with a two bit Mafia Hood and falls in love with a small town girl who is now a famous actress. This is a great novel and Barrow throws in some famous Hollywood names from David Niven to Greta Garbo in the novel. This is yet another interesting read by one of the modern masters of detective mystery's. It is a departure for Woods not to have Stone Barrington in this novel...Wait! He is but not until the last pages and then a minor role for Mr. Barrington. A great novel that is HIGHLY RECOMMENDED!
