REVIEW OF CHOKE CHUCK PALAHNIUK

- In Dune the author Frank Herbert used 3rd person omniscient. He shares the perspectives, thoughts, and feelings of multiple characters. Frank Herbert uses symbolism as a literary device. One of the symbols he uses in the book is water. The Fremen refer to blood as "the body's water," suggesting that the Fremen view water as the blood of the environment. When Thufir Hawat agrees to join the Fremen, he enters the "bond of water," rather than a blood oath. People show their loyalty to one another by spitting or sharing water. Paul and Jessica, during their time with the Fremen, engage in many rituals that involve water. For example, Paul accepts the water of Jamis's corpse after he kills him. After drinking the water, Paul is baptized into the culture of the Fremen, and he is reborn as a leader in their world. For the Fremen, water and life are the same. One of the themes Frank Herbert uses in the book is religion and power. Religion represents a source of comfort and power throughout the novel. Paul pursues the same goals as Kynes, but uses his religious power over the Fremen as their messiah to gain control of the entire Imperium. Paul possesses mystical abilities that go above and beyond a simple heightened awareness or intelligence, but his clever exploitation of religion is his most powerful advantage. Paul's manipulation of religion and the calculated use of legends contrived by the Bene Gesserit allow him to rise to the position of emperor. I would recommend this book to anyone who likes science-fiction and fantasy.

- I loved Dune but this book does make a good addition to the Dune books, it was a little slower in pace and too much politics but the scheming and lies were absolutely brilliant, if you've read Dune and liked it why not go ahead and read the entire series.
