REVIEW OF CASE BACKHOE MANUALS

- When God Says No is a book that expresses a most profound truth with a simplicity that is most appealing. When I received a copy, I read it from cover to cover in a little over an hour. But, that said, it's the kind of book that one keeps near and reaches for again and again - when a moment of crisis arises, or when a word of comfort is needed. The author shares himself with the reader. His rich experience of both God and humanity is caught up in the book he writes. He shares both his goodness and his God-ness with the reader, even as he invites the reader to an in-depth personal relationship with the God Who allows the reality of pain to be experienced by us all, as we journey on - into life forever.

- I always enjoy Carl Hiaasen's books, and I always forget them about ten minutes after finishing. About halfway through this book I realized I had read it before, and it's not the first time that's happened with a Hiassen book. Anyway, this is a rambling tale full of nefarious characters. The fun comes mostly from the ways in which they get their comeuppance (or don't, a few get better than they deserve in the end). The story involves the wreckage left by a massive hurricane hitting Florida, and criminals who arrive to rip off the desperate families trying to recover afterwards, and the corrupt contractors and building inspectors responsible for many of the homes fairing so poorly in the storm. A semi-legal zoo is destroyed by the storm, releasing wild animals into the community (thus the monkey on the book jacket), and the scenes with these animals are, to me, the funniest in the book.
