REVIEW OF TEST PAPERS

- There are so many complaints that Prep's protagonist, Lee, is snobbish, uninvolved, and just plain annoying. I am starting to wonder if this is a reflection of the novel, or of the review author's themselves. I am a sixteen year old female and an avid reader. I picked up Prep while browsing, and was impressed that it was acclaimed by the New Yorker. I have to say that the novel is stunningly insightful in numerous aspects of teenage life. Yes, Lee is flawed. Who isn't flawed at this age? Who honestly could say they didn't spend some of their teenage years pining over an unreachable guy or wallowing in self pity? No one! I found Lee to be an embodiment of my teenage fears and insecurities. For example: Lee mentions how "it's better not to talk with someone after you've had a good conversation with them. Once you do, the good thing you had starts to fade. What if you talk, then run into them again in the book stacks? Then what do you say? I spent a lot of my time hiding." This hit me, because I have been known to have the same trepidation, even going so far as ducking into a different aisle in the grocery store. Immature? Yes. But that's part of growing up. As the saying goes, hindsight is 20/20. It's easy to tell Lee to grow up and not worry what people think. But did you do that at fourteen? I'm not saying the novel is perfect, there are some character flaws. Lee's lack of academic work kind of annoyed me, because she had to have been very intelligent to get admitted to the school on scholarship. There is little explanation on why she decided to be academically apathetic. Also, Lee does not have any obvious epiphany. This may be frustrating, but it is realistic. I have had no such epiphany, but over the years have gained far more confidence and maturity, without me even realizing it. In the end, Lee is going to be okay. She may not be in the same league as Holden Caulfield, (who I, personally, also found frustrating) but with practice and work, she'll get there. I'm not just talking about Lee.

- I read this book in one sitting. The author describes emotions in such an honest fashion that at times I felt that I had found a secret diary and I should look away because it was just too personal. If possible I would give this book six stars on a scale of five. Warning-This is not a happy book. If you're looking for one of those books that starts with the awkward ugly duckling who turns into a swan and lives happily ever after with her prince this is not it. But most of us have already read enough books like that. This book will make you re-evaluate your own life and experiences and take you someplace new and isn't that what the best books do? If you were an outsider you'll relate to and appreciate this book. If you weren't an outsider you'll wonder about the so called "loser" kids you never bothered to know in high school and you will see them in a new light.
