REVIEW OF ALIBABA GROUP A CASE STUDY WDSINET

- When reading this book for my boring french class I never knew I would come to love it. This book, along with Camus's other novels and essays truly helped me define who I am. I highly recommend that it be read and reread ad infinitum!
- Phoebe Anderson February 23, 2000 One motif in Camus' The Stranger is the origin back to the mother of the main character. Meursault, the main character, finds himself at his mother's funeral not knowing the people she lived with in her last days and having no visible forlorn reaction over her death. Yet, in scattered points in the novel she is mentioned especially at times of trouble and concern. The story unravels into the life of this tactile-living, impersonal man and the absurdity he faces after the death of his mother. His mother's funeral seemed to be a burden on his life. "Maman was buried now, that I was going back to work, and that really, nothing had changed." The next time Meursault thinks of his mother is at a time when he hears his stern-faced neighbor crying over the loss of his dog. Meursault had often observed this man, and was perplexed at the maltreatment he showed but still could not live without his dog. "And from a particular noise coming through the partition, I realized he was crying. For some reason I thought of Maman. But I had to get up early the next morning...I went to bed." His train of thought went from the crying neighbor to the loss of a loved one to his mother. She, although he packed her out of his house, left an impact on his life. It might not of been strong enough for him to cry at her funeral, but proves the inkling of memory is with him. "He realized that some people in the neighborhood thought badly of me for having sent Maman to the home, but he knew me and he knew I loved her very much." The dog-owning neighbor points out his concern for Meursault and to the audience his understanding for Meursault's love. Marie, his lover, came to visit him in prison. Meursault became distracted by the mother and son visiting near him. When it was time to go, he could not even focus on Marie but watch as "he said "goodbye Maman," and she reached between two bars to give him a long, slow little wave." He was caught up with the tie between this mother and son and their extended separation. Near his execution, he thinks of his mother. He reminisces about the only story Maman would tell him of his father. His father had seen an execution (the theory Meursault thinks he was there was of enjoyment) and returned home throwing up for the rest of the day. In this, Meursault finds comfort that his only memory can fulfill the absence a father figure. He thinks the only thing people are interested in are seeing an execution. Now, he is on the other side of it. He is the one whom his father would watch. "Maman used to say that you can always find something to be happy about." In his frantic last thoughts, he reached for an answer and a comfort for death. They were announcing departures for a world that now and forever meant nothing to me. For the first time in a long time I thought about Maman...Maman must have felt free then and ready to live it all again. Nobody, nobody had the right to cry over her. And I felt ready to live it all over again too."
