REVIEW OF LEARN COORGI LANGUAGE IN 30 DAYS

- This is all over the map. It's a hermit's reflections on a world that moves too slowly for the rest of us to see. It's a naturalist's insight into the behavior of animals and people. It's a political extremist's commentary on unchecked development and resource depletion. Best of all, it's a delicious anthem of love that sings from the pages, affirming the connection some humans have with the natural world of sun, snow, snakes, and stone. You can't read this and remain untouched by its sincerity, even if (or perhaps because of) Abbey's attitude: a cactus bloom, all fiery beauty encased by sharp needles. Like a masterpiece painting, it really doesn't matter what it's "about" (some dude who becomes a park ranger for a year); it's really just a vehicle for communicating the deepest realizations of an honest questing soul.

- Best to read if you are visiting Arches, the Grand Canyon, or Lake Powell, or if you have been there, or even if you just wish you were there...After reading Abbey's incredible illustration of "his" country, you might as well have been there yourself in spirit, if not in body. Desert Solitaire is part memoir, politics, opinion, beauty, myth, journal, eulogy, ravaging accusation of modern society, and general ramblings on the Southwest. There is very little structure, except that the book opens with Abbey entering Arches in the spring as a ranger, and ends with him leaving in the fall. He touches almost every subject under the desert sun. My favorite chapters were:- "Down the River": on Glen Canyon before the dam-"Polemic Industrial Tourism and the National Parks": scathing and sarcastic, belittling the American automobile tourist-"Rocks": a disturbing legend of the uranium boom in Utah-"Episodes and Visions": general desert musings and tangents

 The best way to describe the feel of this book is the blurb on the back: "rough, tough, combative [...] this book may well seem like a ride on a bucking bronco."
