REVIEW OF STARLING GAME DEVELOPMENT ESSENTIALS BOSE JUWAL

- "The Giver" is a very strong novel whose main point is the importance of differences and choice. Also especially important is the theme of safety over freedom. It demonstrates these points by showing a society with very few differences and freedoms. In these respects it is very similar to "1984", and "A Brave New World", although it seems to be geared for a younger audience. The story revolves around a boy named Jonas who is chosen to become the only one in the community who is given the capability to remember the past. The rest of the community can only know things as they are now, not as they were before. No history books or other reference materials exist, so the "Receiver of Memories", as the position is titled, is the only person with knowledge that can be used in new situations. Everything and everyone else runs by a mechanical routine. Eventually Jonas, encouraged by the former Receiver, flees the village in order to restore the memories to all the people. The ends like "Lady and the Tiger" with no one knowing if Jonas makes it to a better place or dies in the attempt. The biggest problem I saw in this book was the predictable plot. Once you understood the job of the Receiver of Memories you could guess the rest. The term "release" in this book is a euphemism for death designed to be mysterious, but given that those inefficient per the needs of the community are "released" and disappear forever. You know that Jonas does not like or fit into the system, the old Receiver is idealistic and the book needs to make a point. It fits that they would try to change things. The only way to do that is to return memories to the people. The details are just that, details.

- In Lois Lowry's THE GIVER, the main character Jona, lives in a fictitious community sometime in the future. His world revolves around the principle of "sameness." Everything is perfect. Unlike the real world today, in Jona's world there is no conflict, no unemployment, no poverty, no divorce, but most importantly, there is no change. Everyone in Jona's world has been sheltered from the past, sheltered from the memories of past pains and misfortunes. The only person in the community that knows the truth is the Giver. In December, during the Ceremony of Twelve, Jona is given the highest honor, and a lifelong assignment to be the new Giver. Before he can step into his job full swing though, he must learn some valuable lessons from the old Giver. Through those teaching, Jona becomes the recipient of all the memories, and learns the true hypocrisy of the world which surrounds him. On a more personal note, I would just like to say that this is a fabulous book. It really makes you value the world in which you live in, and makes you cherish your ability to make your own decisions and have your own emotions.
