REVIEW OF SAP WEBDYNPRO ONLINE TRAINING COURSE CONTENT

- This play was a sublime, undertoned attack of McCarthyism. The entire idea of persecution of what is unknown drives the characters to believe witnesses which otherwise would have been untrustworthy. At times the insanity taken so seriously is actually funny. All of the characters have central points of weakness and virtue alike; creating complex interactions. I was required to read it, unoptimistically, but it evolved into one of my favorite plays! I never truly understood the power of the phrase,"Witch, Witch!!!" until I read THE CRUCIBLE

- In 1692, in Salem, Massachusetts was a major conflict between government leaders and citizens arouse. Witchcraft was what everybody began to fear. They (the towns people) all believed witches surrounded them. It all started when a girl named Abigail Williams and a bunch of her friends were discovered in the woods dancing. When Reverend Parris came upon them they were dancing around a kettle of soup, singing song of a different tongue. All of a sudden the next day two of the girls are acting strange. One of them is stricken to bed and is almost in a coma state. The other girl constantly paces and will not eat. This is when the parents demand to know what was going on that night. All of the girls that took part in the activity claimed that they were just dancing, until one of the girls slips and lets out what really happened. They were in the woods and Tituba (Reverend Parris slave) was leading songs in the Barbados language while trying to conjure the spirit of one of the girl's dead sister. This is where the real conflict begins. One of the girls (Reverend Parris's Daughter) was the girl that was bed stricken. It is not socially sound for the daughter of the reverend to be conjuring up spirits. If the daughter had really been conjuring up spirits the Reverend would be pushed out of town. How could he run the church if he can't even control his daughter? This is when the conspiracy begins.In order to avoid punishment Abigail tells the elected judge that she once sided with the Devil but is now back on Gods side. She would like to tell the town folk the names of the other people that still have a pact with the Devil. If a person is tried for making a pact with the Devil (witchcraft) they would be hung and their belongings would be auctioned off. Not only did Abigail and her friends list some name of people that made a pact with the Devil, they listed most of the Town. This is when the judge start to have trial, but these were not normal criminal trials, these were witchcraft trials. There was no one to defend the accused it was just the girls word against the accused. People seemed to care but not too much until one very important day. The day when John Procter's Wife, Elizabeth, name came up in court. This infuriated John because he knew exactly why his wife name came up in court. Abigail made up a story about Elizabeth because she had once kicked her out of the Procter house. When Elizabeth had gotten sick (after childbirth) Abigail helped John run things around the house. This is until things turned sexual and Elizabeth found out. Knowing why Abigail brought up Elizabeth's name made John furious. This is the point in the story where the action really heats up. But you will have to read to see exactly how hot it gets.
