REVIEW OF AQA HUMANITIES PAST PAPERS

- I would consider this among the key first person accounts regarding the Holocaust, up there with the works of Anne Frank and Primo Levi. Not only are the factual details recalled with great clarity, but revealed with a pacing and storytelling artistry that would make it a compelling read completely independent of its historical significance.
- The narrator of this novel is a deep & philosophical thinker much drawn towards Buddhist teachings. He is cerebral and completely intellectual in contrast to his subordinate Zorba. Zorba is a man without much education but he is a man who has touched life in its raw form with an earthly outlook towards life. Zorba has seen wars, been in love with many women, married many times, plays the Santuri and loves to dance. Zorba goes through pain, suffering, happiness and joy with a hedonistic attitude and exhibits a great love for life. His old age is no deterrent to his enjoyment of life. Above all Zorba has an opinion of everything ranging from women, relationships, business, religion, nationalism and politics. All his views are from his own bitter and sweet experiences and some of his views on women & religion can put off many. Zorba does not give importance to morals but he exhibits his compassion in his relationship with the old whore, the widow and workers in the mine. His views on the dangers of nationalism, war and religion are interesting. Overall an excellent book with deep insights, reflection and loads of philosophical discourses. This book is a masterpiece. I wonder why Kazantzakis was never given the Noble Prize. When Albert Camus won the Noble prize by one vote more than Kazantzakis he mentioned that Kazantzakis deserved the honour 'a hundred times more' than himself.
