REVIEW OF PRE CALCULUS JAMES STEWART SOLUTIONS 2

- Traditionally this is considered a book about alienation. To me it tells the tragedy of having feelings considered alien by the society in which you live. After killing a man, Meursault is taken before people who shamelessly express their desire to judge him by his personality rather than by what he did or didn't. Even the fact that he was not seen to cry at his mother's funeral becomes an evidence of his guilt. At the same time when all society turns against him in repulsion for his diversity, we start to see the honesty and naivety inherent in his thoughts and decisions. His realization at the end is genial.

- Existentialism, the one thing you must fully understand before reading the stranger, also the ideals existentialism is based around. It states that your time on this earth is pointless, and no matter what you do, you will end up going to hell and be considered a sinner. The main character in this book can approach existentialism in 3 different ways. He can give in and live his life of sin and be doomed to hell, but he will be carefree and worry about nothing he does. The second is he can stand on the edge so to speak, and live his life the way he thinks is good, and laugh in the face of existentialism. The third is he can say forget this, and not even believe in it, and live a happy life, with the false idea that in the end he will go to heaven and be loved by god. The main character takes the first route, and lives his life without care or guilt for his actions, even when he commits a senseless murder on a deserted beach. He shuns love when it comes his way, and he doesn't really think too much about his actions. This book becomes more interesting the more you read, and by the end you will discover what a truly well written story it is.
