REVIEW OF ESTUDIOS SOBRE EL AMOR SALADYORE

- "Carmen and the Letter C" by Cynthia Klinge and Robert B. Noyed is the third volume in the "Alphabet Friends" series, which devotes one 24-page volume to each letter of the alphabet. The idea is to give beginning readers a fun way of mastering letter recognition by telling an entertaining story highlighting a single letter. In "Carmen and the Letter C" we meet a young girl who lives in a cabin out in the country where there are a lot of things that start with the letter "c." Throughout the book words with the featured letter are highlighted, with miniature color illustrations above important words in the text (rebus drawings of city, corn, cows, etc.), and color photographs. The goal is for these read-to books to become stories that younger children can read for themselves and this simple, solid approach should help big time. The first thing young readers learn is the difference between the capital letter "C" and the lowercase letter "c." Children are also introduced to the two different sounds made by the letter "c," both the hard sound in the word "cat" and the soft sound like in the word "city." After the story, in which Carmen's cousin from the city comes to visit the cabin in the country, there are Fun Facts and a calf, corn, and cows. Young readers will also find suggestions for books on those same topics appropriate to their reading level. Because the letter "c" is not highlighted every time it appears in a word, young readers will be able to look through "Carmen and the Letter C" to find other examples. In doing so, they should learn to be able to read this book for themselves.

- I did enjoy Mr Least Heat Moon's book, but I don't think it is for everyone. If you are not a fan of the travelogue genre of books, this might be kind of boring and long-winded. Blue Highways is a good title, because it describes Mr Least Heat Moon's journey through the backroads of America (shown as blue lines on certain maps) and also the somber tone of the book. Mr. LHM is just coming off the breakup of his relationship with the "Cherokee" and seems very depressed. He outfits a van and goes cruising through America for a few months. There are interesting and not-so-interesting people and places along the way and I give kudos to Mr. LHM for including both. The fact that he includes times when he was bored did help to make me feel like I was on the journey with him, experiencing its ups and downs. As other reviewers have noted, he does not speak deeply about his own feelings and emotions, and at some points I did wish he would open up a little more about what he was experiencing on this trip. There are some really good points in the book, including when he meets a team of hang gliders and an eccentric wandering missionary in one of the northern states. I can honestly say I learned a lot from reading this book about all kinds of things: history, fishing, culture, food, etc. I guess that is what Mr LHM really wanted us to take from his journey. To provide an account of backroads America at a certain point in time, and not focus too much on himself, why he undertook what he did and what he got out of it. I'd say there is some bias in favor of the blue-collar, skilled American and against what he seems to see as encroaching materialism, suburbanization and urbanization of rural America. I think the reader can decide how he/she feels about that. I feel the strength of this book is as a historical account of America in the late 1970s. If you enjoy cultural and historical studies, not just of those in political power or of wars and such, this is the book for you. If you enjoy learning about how people live around the world or in the USA, you'll learn much. It doesn't read like a novel and has few if any thrilling moments. Overall I'd like to thank Mr. LHM for taking us along on his trip.
