REVIEW OF BIOMEDICAL INSTRUMENTATION CROMWELL PDF

- In 1931, Aldous Huxley published a book which was controversial, intelligent, and contained a prophetic message for the future. That book was "Brave New World", and seventy years later it is just as relevant as the day it was published. The book takes place in the not-so-distant future when the world has finally achieved a utopian society. In this society, people live lives which were already planned out before their birth. Humans are genetically engineered in a way which would best service society. Everything is for the good of society. Books, religion, poetry and individuality have been outlawed. But one citizen, Bernard Marx is starting to question the world in which he lives. This book is not only creatively written, but expresses an important message: The choices we make and aspects of our individuality affect the society in which we live.

- I thought this was a pretty good book, and would recommend it, but there wasn't really that much of a plot. A gripping and frightening view of the possible future of mankind, although not that likely.
