REVIEW OF CASTING CROWNS LEAD SHEET DOENERORE

- This book is a singular resource for writers and, I presume, other artists and those "non-artists" who perceive their work as a vocation. Some of my favorite passages in the book explore today's insidious attitude that people who claim to be "called" to something are merely "self-indulgent" folks who shun their true responsibility to pursue as much wealth and "productivity" as possible. Norris' journey as a writer/poet and her immersion in monastic life are exquisitely interwoven to create (without directly posing) a question about whether "the monastic path" is much different than any mindful immersion into a meaningful life.

- A friend loaned me this book as I was moving to a new city. That was 3 months ago; I just finished it last night. Every night, I have treated myself to one tiny chapter, or maybe two on a rough day. As a Catholic with some experience in the rhythm of communal life, it was like being wrapped again in the love of that community. It literally helped me calm down. I wish Ms. Norris could have coffee with all my lapsed Catholic siblings of her generation; as it is, I may dare to give one of them the book for Christmas. Thanks to the author for unfolding her story.
