REVIEW OF BIOGRAFI AL FARABI

- Nora Waln was an American Quaker. She married George Edward Osland-Hill, an officer in the English Foreign Service, whom she called "Ted." Ted had one daughter by his first wife, Marie Osland-Hill Wade. In 1934 Ted retired from the English Foreign Service and went to Germany to study classical music. Nora reluctantly followed. During this time his daughter was in Switzerland going to school. They were in Germany until late 1938. While there, Nora wrote Reaching for the Stars - her observations of the German people, Hitler and life during the rise of Nazism. During the war, she lived in London where her home served as a temporary half-way house for children the underground smuggled out of Germany, Norway and Czechoslovakia. After the war she went back to Germany as a correspondent for The Atlantic Monthly. In 1946 she did a speaking tour to 60 cities in the US and Canada to raise money for relief efforts and encourage members of her sorority, Kappa Kappa Gamma, to make layettes she promised for the babies of Norway. These parents did not even have newspaper to cloth their children. I learned of Nora Waln when I was a child because Kappas gathered around a ping pong table in my mother's basement to sew nightgowns, booties, hats, blankets and other items for these layettes. 5,000 layettes (each layette made up of 70 items) were delivered to Norway the following year. If you liked House of Exile, you may want to try Reaching for the Stars. It is out of print. I got a used copy through Amazon.

- Dana's Manual of Mineralogy is a classic in the field of mineralogy. Although it deals with many old-time methods in chemical geology it still provides a valuable insight to classical mineral localities and to a classical crystallography providing many crystal morphology pictures of mineral specimens in discussion.
