REVIEW OF MANAGEMENT INFORMATION SYSTEM NOTES FOR MBA

- Written by the father of a severely autistic boy, this book attempts to take the reader through the experiences of a young family stricken with the diagnosis of autism, and their attempts to look at the glass "half-full instead of half-empty." The birth of Stephen takes the McAndrew family on a journey of learning, pain and revelation as they struggle to understand the meaning of this jolt to their family constellation. Jeff and Debbie realize that each of Stephen's steps in life(e.g. learning to walk to wave) is a huge accomplishment. Stephen's father Jeff quotes a friend of his who was paralyzed from the neck down.."It's not about the 900 things Stephen cannot do, but rather, it is the 9000 things he can do."This is the attitude the McAndrew family lives each day with. Jeff also reflects on friends of his who have medically fragile children and how lucky Stephen is to be able to walk and to eat on his own...some of the basics we all take for granted. The theme of the book also carries a deeper tone. That is, never take a moment with your children for granted, and accept your child for what he or she is. The author spends time with the reader emphasizing the term of one of his favorite role models, the late psychologist, Dr. Carl Rogers. That term is "unconditional positive regard." So many parents spend hundreds of hours and perhaps thousands of dollars on blood tests, urine tests, dietary methods or other experimental trial with their kids. The irony is that some parents want to change their children, but fail to love them for what they are..."right here, right now." The key concept here is balance. It is important, the author says, to balance what your child is (the child's soul if you will) with what they can perform....and to learn to appreciate both. McAndrew also interviews a pediatrician and childhood friend from Sheboygan, Dr. Steven Pizer, whose comprehensive and logical answers also are filled with compassion for children and parents. Dr. Darold Treffert, who did the forward to the book, was a consultant to the movie "Rainman" with Dustin Hoffman. He has dedicated his life to the study of autism and autistic savants and his book "Extraordinary People" has been widely read. Treffert very eloquently describes the challenges that autism theorists face and postulates that "until we call things by their right names," we remain in somewhat of a classification quandary in the field of autism. In the conclusion of the book, the author tells us about the hope that is always possible and is hopeful that more genetic answers can be found in his and his son's lifetime. McAndrew adds his own poetry about his son at the end of the book along with pictures of his handsome son. He also talks about his typical son Ryan and what struggle a seven year-old sibling has in trying to understand his special brother. McAndrew dedicates the book to his wife, who bears the brunt of therapy schedules, school meetings, insurance calls, etc. while Jeff is at work. A chapter called "A Mother's Voice" is dedicated to all mothers of autistic children and their profound challenges. The book is highly applauded by local community leaders who Jeff let read his rough drafts. School board, city officials and county officials all have high praise for this original and heartfelt work. This book is a great read for all parents of special children and well as all parents. Jeff also writes and speaks for a living. He presently works as a news reporter and talk show host at WHBL Radio in Sheboygan. A little more from Jeff's bio page....he has won 16 broadcasting awards during his 16 years in journalism including two statewide awards for a documentary on the "First Step Autism Program," the first early intervention public school autism program in the state of Wisconsin.

- Itten, himself is one of the greatest color theorist of our century, and the masterful mind behind the Bauhaus School. In this book Itten describes his color theory and the facts of his famous "Color Star", which is one of the most strongest tools for color harmony for designers and alike. Most color books have samples of color harmonies you choose from when you design, or talk about complementary colors, but can't tell you why you use such combinations or so. If you have an analytical approach to design, rather than just copying what others do, you will love this book. You will begin to understand the language of colors. Have you ever heard of "the Seven Color Contrast", if not then it is time for you to get familiar about it. This book is an evaluation of Itten's masterpiece "Art of Color". The chapter on subjective experience of color is very limited in this book. If you are willing to invest more on color matters buy "Art of Color". If you are happy to stay with the basics then this book is adequate for your purposes.
