REVIEW OF 17TH EDITION IEE WIRING REGULATIONS EIGHTH

- The Traveler depicts the journey of the story's protagonist, Mihály, towards a personal discovery: his self. The story begins in Venice, where Mihály and his new wife, Erzsi, are on their honeymoon. As Mihály begins to open up to Erzsi, he tells her of his childhood; something he wishes that he could go back to. As

Mihály's memory becomes deeper and more profound, as it already was, he starts to enlighten Erzsi and fantasize about his childhood friends: Tamás, Evá, Ervin, and János. Tamás and Evá Ulpius are the only two people that Mihály had ever cared for. Although he was not in love with Evá, he holds a deep respect for her. But, he insists, that if he was in love either of them, it was Tamás. "If you must insist I loved anyone, then it would have to be Tamás. Tamás was my ideal." (Szerb, 31) The Ulpius house, where the brother and sister grew up, was a house in which there were no rules or boundaries. The free way of living liberated each and every one of the friends that stayed after school, and sometimes during school, to play there. Most of the time they would act out scenes of a play, where Evá played a woman deceiver, and Mihály and Tamás would be the victims of some sort. "Evá loved being the woman who cheats on men, betrays men, and eventually murders men; Tamás and I loved being cheated on, loved being betrayed, loved being murdered, or at least greatly humiliated..." (Szerb, 31) Although the Ulpius house's regulations went against his own family's morals and upbringings, Mihály feels complete dedication to the siblings, almost as if he is obsessed with them. As Mihály concludes his story to Erzsi, he tells of Tamás' suicide, Evá's disappearance, and Ervin's conversion in religions. As the novel proceeds, Mihály leaves Erzsi, and wanders through Europe searching for answers; for meaning in life; for Evá. The only thing that ever made sense in Mihály's life were Tamás and Evá, and since Tamás is dead, he feels the need to find Evá. For what purpose, he hasn't figured out yet. Eventually, Mihály ends up in Perugia, where he meets a young, American art major, Millicent. Because he has spent all of his honeymoon money, he is forced to borrow money from Millicent, who is very wealthy. While he is contemplating on taking the money from the girl, which is not a proper thing to do, he really starts to think of his actions. "Let's be honest about it: wasn't he regressing back to the ethics of the Ulpius house?" (Szerb, 105) Mihály can only relate rash, unsuitable, and erroneous actions back to the Ulpius house, where he learned to free his mind and do what he wants. Erzsi, on the other hand, stays in Paris with a friend because she is so baffled as to why Mihály left her on their honeymoon. Although she finds Mihály later in the novel, and should be quite angry with him, she refuses to let him hurt her again. She also promises to him that she never wants to see him hurt. Erzsi, though she thought she had found her true happiness with Mihály, is also on a path towards self discovery and finding what she wants in the world. This is how Mihály and Erzsi are running on parallel tracks through the entire novel. Mihály is going forward trying to find Evá, but ironically, answers to his past while Erzsi is moving backward; starting over again with her ex-husband Zoltán. But both, no matter which direction they are heading, are leaning towards the unearthing of who they are inside. Erzsi realizes that she is not a part of Mihály's life in the way that she wants to be. When she becomes acquainted with János Szepetneki in Paris, she still longs for Mihály and acceptance in to his life. "Erzsi allowed herself to languish in Szepetneki's desire, feeling that though this desire, through its awakening, she would truly become Mihály's woman and enter the magic circle, the old Ulpius-circle, Mihály's one and only reality." (Szerb, 151) This is correct, the Ulpius house had become Mihály's only truth; the only real thing in this world for him to keep faith in. Before Mihály ends up in Rome, where he is sent on account of Ervin's insight, he meets Dr. Ellesley. Dr. Ellesley, immediately upon encountering Mihály, is able to diagnose him. Dr. Ellesley asks Mihály if he has lost someone close to him, in which Mihály says yes. Mihály even admits to wanting to go back to the only era that ever made sense to him. "I'm suffering from acute nostalgia. I want to be young again. Do you have any medicine for that?" (Szerb, 112) Although Mihály seems like a confusing and complex man, it is easy to understand why his heart aches. Once Mihály sees Evá in Rome, he vows to become part of the working class just to be in the same city as her, in hopes that he will run in to her again. Finally, they are brought together by János, who told Evá of Mihály's location. When Evá tells Mihály that she will be moving to India, Mihály finally wants to go through with his own suicide, just like Tamás had done. When certain unplanned events arise, Mihály is unable to go through with his premeditated death. Evá leaves the country and Mihály's father comes to Rome and brings Mihály back to Budapest. Eventually, when Mihály realizes that he must stay alive because he is weak and has surrendered, he comprehends the idea of death and that at some time, he doesn't know when, but it will find him, not the other way around.

- I got this book to write a paper on Charles Brenner not knowing that I had found the holy grail pertaining to psychoanalytic theory. This is going to be a very important book for my library and I will be constantly referring back to it.
