REVIEW OF THE EDGAR AWARDS 2018 SUBMISSIONS MYSTERY WRITERS OF

- I am a long time fan of Ross

Macdonald, and especially the Lew Archer stories. I have read all the novels at least twice. I agree with the idea that these are "the best series of mystery novels ever written by an American," and I would even drop the word "mystery" from that. They transcend the mystery genre into real literature. The early novels have the flavor of a 1940s pulp fiction hard-boiled detective yarn. But Ross Macdonald matured out of that and came into his own by the mid 1950s. The novels became more serious somehow, without being dry or preachy. Quite the contrary. All that said, I must say that this one, the Doomsters, is probably my least favorite of all the serious novels. There are too many murders. It tries too hard to be deep and reflective. It is too talky. Unlike the others, it is not a "page turner." I certainly would not want someone to start the series with the Doomsters. What then? I suggest the Zebra Striped Hearse. Then maybe the Dalton Case, eventually leading up to the really superb ones, like Sleeping Beauty.

- Long before Oprah and her book club, I was a kid in school and ran out of books to read. My Mom had the whole collection and I grumbled at the plain dictionary-type covers. Little did I know that I was about to read a collection of the most magical author I've ever known. East of Eden is something that you can only experience yourself. It's my favourite out of all Steinbeck's novels (and there isn't one bad Steinbeck book that's not good). I recommend this to you, your family, your friends, your children. I think everyone should read this book once in their lifetime.
