REVIEW OF ZEN IN THE MARTIAL ARTS

- This is not a book that details planning, strategy or tactics. Instead, this is a series of interviews collected in connection with a decade-long project by personnel of the Eisenhower Center of the University of New Orleans. In addition to selecting and editing, Ronald Drez actually collected many of these interviews himself. The result is a skillfully pieced together vision of D-Day utilizing the authentic voices of the men who were there, who witnessed first hand the carnage and success of the largest amphibious invasion in history. These are the words of men who lived through the night jumps, the hellish push from the sea to the coast, the inch-by-inch clawing up the sand flats and cliffs of the Overlord beaches to hookup with the airborne troops already inland. The voices are French, German, British, Canadian and American. From 1st Sergeant Len Lomell on Pointe du Hoc with the 2nd Rangers, to Frank Simeone of C co. of the 116th on Omaha making his way up the Vierville draw, to my friend and neighbor, Ken Russell, of the 82nd Airborne hanging from his chute on the church at Ste. Mere Eglise before taking out a German AA truck, these are words chosen by the fighting men themselves. Contained in their words are the voices of the dead, voices felt and heard only with the heart and who perhaps speak loudest of all. And they speak to us of the price of freedom they and their comrades were willing to pay for us. Published on the fifty-year anniversary of D-Day it is a fitting tribute to the gallant men of that generation who lived and died that day and is a fine companion piece for Ambrose's excellent "D-Day".

• I am also prior active duty and now an Air Force spouse. Like the previous reviewer, I am a college student and will have my B.A. this June. This book is so OLD SCHOOL considering it was published in 1990! First of all, the book's only focus is officer's wives. In the first chapter the authors alienated all enlisted wives. How can you write a book about military wives and then only mention enlisted wives when illustrating how much officer's wives looked down on them or how little money the enlisted force makes? Second, as I have only been associated with the military since '96, I can't say that officer's wives didn't used to act so superior. However, in today's military, unless I am blind as a bat, you just DO NOT see that kind of ignorant discrimination towards the enlisted troops and their spouses. They paint this picture of OW's as shallow witches living vicariously through their husbands and EW's as uneducated trailer trash. The authors then attempted to address the discrimination that foreign-wives face, but not w/out making some nasty comments about how enlisted men marry Asian women b/c they have low self-esteem after being ordered around all day at work and needed to be the boss at home! OH yeah, and I really LMAO when I read the part about an officer's wife giving her husband's rank at the clinic to alert "the medical staff to her position of power." Give me a break. What a shame if anyone unfamiliar with the military were to read this book and believe any of it to be truth. Today's military is nothing like this. And God knows when I was enlisted, I respected my commanding officers b/c of THEIR rank, THEIR hard work, THEIR knowledge and experience, NOT b/c their wife knew how to throw a good dinner party and was a smart dresser. Don't waste your time on this book unless you're looking for a good laugh at a has been's reminiscence of living in la-la land.
