REVIEW OF THE ATLAS OF BEAUTY ABOUT MIHAELA NOROC

- The current consensus view of America's future is that we'll continue to be a happy prosperous melting pot, and that economic growth will offset the combined effects of the unfunded age wave and the massive new influx of foreign immigration. I'm a classical liberal and I deeply, truly wish that would come to pass. I'm still looking for ways in which that optimistic outcome can be helped along. But virtually no one is talking about the possible consequences if we fail to do that. Nor is there any discussion of the possible causes of failure, or of the likelihood that things could come apart in rapid and ugly fashion. No one except Tom Chittum (and Peter Brimelow in "Alien Nation") is daring or even bothering to ask hard questions of this type. And that in itself scares me. As Chittum notes, the US is now a multicultural imperial power. All such nations in history have disintegrated violently. Failures which are avoided are most often the ones that have been anticipated. But America's not running any downside scenarios for itself other than in these small books. Big mistake. I live in CA, right on top of the San Andreas Fault, but that's trivial compared to the new demographic and cultural and linguistic and economic fault lines I see opening all around my community. And that's not the future. That is today's reality. Some of Chittum's analysis can be faulted. I do not share his political position, which is pretty far out on the right as far as I can infer. I would also bet on a long period of political infighting long before shooting would start. But I learned some unsettling things from this book that I didn't know before. The facts check out. If you want cotton candy, look someplace else. If you want a hard look at the USA in Y2K plus 10, read Chittum.

- Any and all of John Holt's books are to be treasured. Way back in the fifties I read them eagerly when my first son was in primary school! First I read "How Children Fail", then "How Children Learn" and others whose names I have not retained. They all deal with the kind of issues that made and make school learning hell or at least boring for really bright children, and they resonated with my soul and encouraged me to do better for my own son -- now nearly 60 and an amazing original and independent thinker leading a deeply satisfying life. For goodness sake, try it; you'll like it!!
