REVIEW OF BREALEY CORPORATE FINANCE 10TH EDITION SOLUTIONS MANUAL

- Reading this Pulitzer Prize winning play set in New Orleans (1947) is like watching a movie. Tennessee Williams provides ample narratives and complete stage directions. Excellent detailed descriptions makes us visualize the characters and the settings. We can even hear the music as it wails in the background. We know every move of the characters and their personal feelings are revealed. There aren't too many lengthy monologues and the play moves quickly. It's easy to see why this book was turned into a movie. Blanche is an aging Southern belle and an alcoholic who lives between illusion and reality. Darkness is her comfort and light is her enemy, as it will expose the truth behind the illusion. She makes conscious effort to avoid the light. After losing the family estate, her job, unable to remain in other locations, she comes to stay with her sister Stella, who is married to tough guy Stanley. Feeling that he and Stella got swindled out of the estate, Stanley is wise to Blanche. She becomes involved with his friend Mitch. Stanley does what he can to expose the truth about Blanche's past life and her relationship with Mitch is crumbling. It is Stanley who further contributes into the demise of Blanche.Rizzo

- I have become a big Steinbeck fan over the last few months, having read The Pearl, Of Mice and Men, Tortilla Flat, and Cannery Row during that time. The beauty of Steinbeck's style that is evident in all of these stories is that, much like a masterful boxer, he will float and spar while filling the reader in on the transpiring events, and then a paragraph comes along that literally jumps to life, like a well-timed barrage of attacks. Either in the form of layers and layers of description that make you feel as if you are feeling, smelling, hearing and seeing everything the characters are, or in the form of a humorous anecdote that causes you to read about four times faster than normal, the barrage carries you through the story. Cannery Row is set in Monterey, CA during the Depression and focuses on a handful of characters, but the main ones are Doc and Mack. Doc runs a place called Western Biological and works collecting animals for other scientists and doing other work at his lab that is not really specified. He is rather an enigma in the town, and he is a Renaissance Man. Everybody in Cannery Row knows and loves him, including several ladies, and he is just generally a good guy that seems to be extremely intelligent. He is also a flawed character, though. He drinks beer for breakfast, is afraid of commitment with the ladies, and seems to fear genuine intimacy with anyone. He stays up late reading and listening to classical music and gets up early to do his studies/work. Mack is a "bum" by our standards, but he fills a role that Steinbeck loves to explore. He is extremely intelligent and gifted in some areas, yet lacks the motivation to hold a steady job. He is a leader and natural salesman and politician, yet he chooses to lead a group of other bums that he calls "the boys" and lives in a shack that he finagled out of the local grocery store owner. Through the medium of extremely well-developed characters and beautiful, descriptive narrative, Steinbeck also instructs us about the nature of humans. One of the basic things that I learned about this nature is that people who are in "down and out" circumstances are often very capable and intelligent people who simply prefer not getting caught up in the social rat races of life. This was evident in the story of the parade, and if you read the book, Doc will do a better job of explaining what I mean than I can. Steinbeck also takes subtle jabs at those of us who turn our noses up at these people, like the town people who taxed (read: extorted) the "illegal" whorehouse at an exorbitant rate in order to stay open and then frequented the establishment through the side door. I highly recommend this book because it affected, instructed, and entertained me, and it will do the same for you.
