REVIEW OF SHATTERED CONSENSUS

- I love book. It have good informto many piktur many word good. I use grow good plant very very happy,
- In Collapse, Diamond lays out an excellent framework for discussing what makes societies fail. He surveys multiple sites of collapse (quite global in scale) and determines a short list of factors that predict "collapse." While his historical/geographic work is rigorous and leaves little room for rebuttal on substantive counts (specifically addressing allegations that his previous work "Guns, Germs and Steel" was environmentally deterministic), his approach to the material gets really repetitive: he sets up his framework in the beginning and then takes us through his five axes of collapse over and over again in the case of each society. This is still a great text, though, and it will help a newcomer get a working understanding of the problems that have plagued small or ancient societies (the Maya, Easter Island) to the issues we are still working through (China's pollution, Australia's demand on their natural resources).
