REVIEW OF DAHEJ GIDC COMPANY LIST

- With sameness in a community, no one can experience real pain. In The Giver, written by Lois Lowry, no one has inflicted pain on him or her. Even if they fall off their bike they have never felt it. In the ending I think that he went to a community that actually has pain and suffering. He also hasn't heard music before. He has only heard it in his memories. With these memories that are giver by the giver, he has to suffer with them. I think that the ending really implies that he has re-entered his old community. They have taken in the memories while he was gone. Just like when Rosemary "Released" herself and the community got all of the lost memories. With these new memories, they have been able to see the colors and feel love. Now they have opened a door to the past that is a memory. These memories are the key for how they survive. I recommend this book to a person that has really good imagination. With this imagination, you can understand the ending very well and that is why I have comprehended the ending. The ending is a little hard to understand because of the sudden stop that is on the last page, it just says all of the things about the community, and it never states what the community says or does to him. The ending is very hard to understand, but I think I chose the right one. I chose this ending because there have been many hints to describe it. For example, the planes just stopped coming. I think that someone had seen them when they had that really close encounter. Another reason is that they had described many curves in the road. This has given an obvious reason that they had gone in a circle. He had also said that he had recognized the face in the crowd. That makes it just plain obvious that he had come back to his old community when he saw this. I think that Lois Lowry should come out with The Giver 2. In this book she should write about the new community. This should put a better ending on the book. Then people wouldn't think this book is so weird. I'm not saying that this book is bad or anything, I'm just saying that this book was hard to understand for some people. If this book were banned from all schools, then the people wouldn't know what it would be like to be in this kind of community. If this book is banned, then many books like this will be banned. For example, a book with Hitler in it will be banned. If this book is banned, then people won't learn about history and a book that talks about drugs or war will be banned. If this happens then the whole world will change.

- The Giver is a pretty good book. It had exciting parts in it. It is about a community that has no color or pain. Everyone is equal there except the Giver and Jonas. They have to experience pain and suffering. Then one day they think of a good plan. Jonas leaves so that the community can experience the pain and memories. Jonas found out what they did when people got released. He was horrified when he found out that they were killed with a poison. He didn't want that to happen to the baby that lived with him till it wouldn't cry during the night. So when Jonas left the community, he took the baby with him. He pedalled for days and days. Sometimes he had to hide from jet-planes that flew overhead looking for him. He pedalled till it snowed and finally reached a place called Elsewhere where no one ever went to before. The ending kind of leaves you hanging. But it is still a good book.
