REVIEW OF KAPLAN USMLE STEP 1 QBOOK KAPLAN USMLE QBOOK

- If I could give it a 10, I would. This book is superb on all levels. The first time I read it, I was in high school and it was translated to Hebrew. It had a huge effect over me, and I thought about it often. When I could already read it in English, I searched for it; however, the discrepancy between the original and translated titles set me off for years. I only found it and read the original when I was about 28. And the book is still great when reading it as an adult as it was when I was a teenager. I just love the character of Cat, with his cynical remarks and sharp observations, with his tragic childhood and hope for the future. This character totally makes the book. The plot is great, with lots of suspense, and I also love the fact that every character has clearly-defined and convincing reasons for their actions and behavior. The supporting characters are also great, totally relatable despite living in a setting that is so different from my time and social standing. The setting just sucks you in - after finishing it, I went out and was actually surprised to see buses instead of mods. The writing is amazing, Joan Vinge really is a superb writer, her descriptions are succinct and her metaphors are so true sometimes. And another thing that I love about this book - about the entire series, really - is that it has a theme beyond the actual story, a theme that relates to issues such as racism, xenophobia, tolerance, acceptance; it makes you think about human nature. This what makes the story truly timeless, for me.

- A central methodological thinking error of Sarfati's book, typical of the creationist genre, is the mistaken belief that large, intricately complex structures necessarily imply a creator. Rather than speculate about distant subjects such as ancient species origin, let's look at something clearly knowable and only 2,000 years old. My Ph.D. is in linguistics and I have taught or directly supervised instruction in over two dozen languages. Each language is an extremely, elaborately complex, multi-systemic structure. Two thousand years ago, Spanish, French, Italian, Portuguese, etc., didn't exist. They exist today, each as a highly complex structure, but none was created, nor was its direction of development directed by anyone. Each simply evolved from spoken Latin; the evolution of each is known and documented. It is manifestly unnecessary to postulate the existence of a creator to account for multi-layered, highly organized structures.
