REVIEW OF GUJARAT TOURIST ROAD ATLAS STATE DISTANCE GUIDE FREE

- There are certain books that rise above any other in their field and the Classical Guitar Method by Matteo Carcassi is the one for teaching Classical Guitar. If a student seriously wants to learn to play Classical Guitar, then this method will guide him along the best path available for learning this complex and beautiful instrument. It is a classic, having been written centuries ago, and it has risen to the rigors of times inexorable review. It was written in the 1800's and still serves beginner students with grace, style, and effectiveness.
- Baroness Orczy was fully capable of writing first-rate Fair-Play Puzzle Stories. Her 38 short stories centered around her peculiar amateur armchair detective, the Old Man in the Corner, are evidence of that. In LADY MOLLY OF SCOTLAND YARD (1910), however, her female detective relies mainly on intuition--feminine intuition that earns her the respect of her male colleagues throughout the entire British Isles--and we readers are usually not given enough clues to solve most of the eleven "mysteries" contained in this collection. Instead, as with most of the Sherlock Holmes stories, we are usually supposed to wander around in the dark with a Watson-Figure--the narrator here is named Mary Granard--and then feel pleasure and admiration at the ending of a story when Lady Molly pulls a surprising solution out of the air. The eleven cases, which were published in magazines in 1909-1910, are (1) "The Ninescore Mystery" (the murder of a young woman and the disappearance of her sister); (2) "The Frewin Miniatures" (missing art objects); (3) "The Irish Tweed Coat" (thwarting the Mafia); (4) "The Fordwych Castle Mystery" (the murder of a servant woman); (5) "A Day's Folly" (apparent assault and forgery); (6) "A Castle in Brittany" (preventing the theft of a will); (7) "A Christmas Tragedy" (the murder of an old man); (8) "The Bag of Sand" (the murder of an old woman); (9) "The Man in the Inverness Cape" (the disappearance of a man); (10) "The Woman in the Big Hat" (the murder of a man in a crowded restaurant); and (11) "Sir Jeremiah's Will" + "The End" (a 2-chapter murder mystery that led to Lady Molly's quitting the police force). In my judgment, the best three stories are the fourth, the fifth, and the tenth, which I'd give "B" grades to; the weakest two are the seventh and eleventh, which I'd give "D" grades to (both depend on far-fetched lucky coincidences for their solutions, and the eleventh contains sloppy mistakes about the time-line of events). The other six stories seem to deserve only "C" grades. Incidentally, four murderers in this collection commit suicide to avoid arrest and hanging; while many of Orczy's contemporary mystery writers also used this plot twist at the endings of their stories, I know of none who used it this often. Granting that these stories have a strong, pioneering female protagonist who succeeds where "the sterner sex" repeatedly fails, the style of narration may occasionally annoy some readers. Be prepared for several dozen passages where Mary Granard gushingly refers to Lady Molly as "my dear lady" and raves about the beauty of Lady Molly's eyes and face and figure--and wardrobe. Like many other authors--including Conan Doyle--Baroness Orczy occasionally recycled plot gimmicks that she had invented in earlier stories. Anyone who has read any of her other collections of short mysteries--THE CASE OF MISS ELLIOTT (1905), THE OLD MAN IN THE CORNER (1909), UNRAVELLED KNOTS (1925), and SKIN O' MY TOOTH (1928)--will be far more likely to foresee the solutions to the eleven mysteries in this book than people who have not. For instance, the first story here resembles Orczy's "The Ayrsham Mystery" (1904); the second is a lot like "Who Stole the Black Diamonds?" (1901) and "The Mystery of the Ingres Masterpiece" (1925); the fourth and fifth respectively call to mind "The Tytherton Case" (1925) and "An Unparalleled Outrage" (1902); and the tenth is basically a sexual reversal of the plot of "The Mysterious Death on the Underground Railway" (1904).
