Situated Learning Cambridge University Press

Provides an account of war in the West from antiquity to the present day

Introduction to Information Retrieval Cambridge University Press

In this important theoretical treatise, Jean Lave, anthropologist, and Etienne Wenger, computer scientist, push forward the notion of situated learning - that learning is fundamentally a social process. The authors maintain that learning viewed as situated activity has as its central defining characteristic a process they call legitimate peripheral participation (LPP). Learners participate in communities of practitioners, moving toward full participation in the sociocultural practices of a community. LPP provides a way to speak about crucial relations between newcomers and old-timers and about their activities, identities, artefacts, knowledge and practice. The communities discussed in the book are midwives, tailors, quartermasters, butchers, and recovering alcoholics, however, the process by which participants in those communities learn can be generalised to other social groups.

REVIEW OF CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS 978 0 521 18537 0 ENGLISH IN

- A student of mine recently said, "I use Dune as a philosophy of life." Given how hard it was to connect with this particular student, I chose to reread the book to better understand the student and to revisit a book that I loved in high school. I remember reading the entire series in school and being engrossed in the story. Now, having stopped reading fantasy and sci-fi except for "The Lord of the Rings", I was wondering how I would look at Dune as literature. Interestingly, "Dune" is a "Reading List" book in Montgomery County Libraries, a well deserved indicator of its classic status. The pace of this first book is outstanding. You get the background necessary on the Atreides family's departure from their lush home of Caladan to the dangerous, though potentially more lucrative, world of Dune. Herbert skillfully reveals how this royal family has to adapt to the extreme conditions of the desert world. The theme of prophesy and destiny is also there from the outset with Paul Atreides trial with the Bene Gesserit "gom jabbar". The book has action, war, politics, philosophy, religious meditation, scarcely concealed environmental commentary and wonderful characters. Paul's evolution from insightful adolescent to desert prophet is the central theme of the story, but the political and military struggles between the Harkonnens and the Atreides family is equally compelling. The shifting allegiances of the struggle and the historical backgrounds that introduce each chapter are the tale telling of Herbert the master. This book is immensely ambitious and, for the most part, succeeds in creating a compelling world with compelling characters. I can't help stating a few things that struck me as minor flaws. The polar opposites of good and evil were a little tough for me to take at times. Duke Leto is portrayed almost as an innocent saint and Baron Harkonnen is portrayed as irredemably evil. For a book that usually tries to model real political drama in a sci-fi context, Harkonnen especially was hard to stomach at times. The philosophy and religion of the Bene Gesserit were interesting to me, but I think the politics are stronger than the spiritual in the book. Other readers and reviewers may disagree here, however. I'm more concerned with the Bene Gesserit and the religion of dune in future books. In contrast, Herbert's approach toward seeing the future, a philosophical core idea of the book is outstanding. Paul's struggle to negotiate vision, prophesy and leadership will challenge all to think about the challenges and responsibilities of predictions. There are a few key silent periods; Herbert sometimes chooses to skip a few years to maintain the pace. I don't know if they exist, but I'd like to hear tales of how Paul started leading Fremen raids or how the Harkonnens oppressed the everyday citizens of Dune. Like the history of our world, the history of Dune often neglects the everyday citizens who had to operate in the midst of conflict. Here, though, I understand Herbert. It's more that I dig the book so much that I want to know more about Dune in this time period than that I think Herbert could have written a significantly better book. I dig Dune even better than the Star Wars world, especially given Lucas' flawed efforts in the prequels. It's just harder to write visually stunning stuff for movies in a bland desert than in "a galaxy far, far way". Still I can't help but wonder if Lucas borrowed any ideas in constructing Tatooine? Kind of wandering here, but I hope everyone gets the point. This is great sci-fi, not to be missed if you've got any interest in the genre at all. 6 stars!!!--SD

- Dune is amazing. Frank Herbert created a world, a government, religion, language, and a three hundred year history. The part that makes this book so great is that it takes problems and situations from our lifetime and puts them in their uncut form in another world. The ideas he presents are timeless, and the beliefs are intriguing. He's created a world down to the bare scientific facts. If your into sci-fi, or even just politics, grab this one quickly!
