REVIEW OF MATHEMATICS EXEMPLAR EXAMINATION GRADE 12 PAPER

- Within The Tale-Tale Heart, a disfigured old man becomes the object of the narrator's wrath. With precision the narrator sneaks into the old man's home and kills him because of a grotesque eye that has obsessed the narrator. Through the narrator's actions, Poe destroys "the external universe as usually perceived and eradicates the barriers erected by time, space and self. With the destruction of the reasoned world, the world of the imagination can take over [allowing] Poe to confuse sight and sound, sight and smell, fire and water, life and death, and the various other elements which man's reason keeps apart or regards as polarities" (Ketterer 28). Through the narrator's slow creeping motion into the old man's room (which lasts hours), Poe is able to not only alter reality, but also our concept of time.As in The Black Cat, the narrator in this story also leads the police to the body. However, it is not an outside force that leads to his capture, it is his own mental state. "In the conclusion of the story, the ringing in the madman's ears first is fancied, then later becomes distinct, then is discovered to be so definite that it is erroneously accorded external actuality, and finally grows to such obsessive proportions that it drives the criminal into an emotional and physical frenzy" (Howarth 97). The beating of the old man's heart that the narrator hears in his mind is an distortion of his reality. The man's heart is not actually beating, but the narrator is convinced that he hears the sound because Poe has created a sound illusion. Reality and illusion in this story merge to create a new world where anything is possible, even the beating of a dead man's heart.

- I don't understand readers' negative comments--this is vintage Patricia Cornwell! The plot was well developed and intriguing, the characters were interesting, and Marino just gets better and better! He and Dr. Scarpetta remind me of a long-married couple in the way they play off each other. I actually caught myself chuckling aloud at some of their interchanges. And when the possibility began to exist that Benton might still be alive, I felt the hairs on the back of my neck stand up. Just a minor suggestion: Patricia, drop the lesbianic overtones; we know you're bisexual and it's evidently a big part of your life, but it just gets in the way of your stories...they stand up just fine without this digression!
