REVIEW OF RPP EKONOMI SMA KURIKULUM 2013 KELAS X XI XII SILABUS

- I am impressed, stunned, and fearful. The implications of this book are staggering. A society where pleasure and mindless entertainment are preferable to thinking and knowledge... a country where the government entertains itself with wars... a world in which the children kill each other every day and take pleasure in destruction... does this sound familiar? This book is a shocking reminder of the road our civilization is currently going down. Will the next generation go to school to learn more about sports and television? Will all books ever be outlawed because ideas frighten people? This book makes you wake up and take a look around... I personally don't like what I see.

- This book deals with the still-controversial issue of government censorship-the worst case scenario. Not only does the government limit people's ability to think for themselves, but the entertainment and advertising industry picks up their slack. This possible universe contains 3-D televisions to live in, cars that travel more than 100 mph, and radios that can be plugged directly into the ear when there's nothing else to do. A society in which presidential elections and the declaration of war is no cause for concern, and certainly not more important than what's happening on the most popular television program. A world where the acquisition of knowledge isn't a goal and where there are no books. In fact, books are illegal, and when someone concealing them is found, their books are burned as well as their house. And if the person doesn't come out of the house...it's a shame, but nothing to lose sleep over. That is Guy Montag's job; to burn books and this is the world in which he has lived, and it is the only world he knows. Until his life is changed forever by a series of revelations, including a friendship with a young woman named Clarisse who tells him what living really means and shows him that his life has really been a ghost-life. After that realization, his life fell apart. He realized he was living an empty life with an immoral, mindless, violent job, a wife he doesn't know-and doesn't love-and no one he could truly call a friend except Clarisse. Confused and distraught, Guy fled to find guidance about books, the future, life, and-most of all-himself, from the one man he thinks can help: an old professor by chance. From there, his journey takes him on a whirlwind of soul-searching and discovery, which will shake your beliefs and force you to reconsider your ethics and all else you hold dear.
