REVIEW OF CORPORATE TAXATION PROBLEMS SOLUTIONS AND EXPLANATIONS

- Dorothy Truscott has written two of the clearest bridge books I have ever read. They may not be great for the Life Masters, which I am not, but for those of us who enjoy playing for the fun of it, both are great books to improve our games.

- Here are just a few examples of this absolutely bad writing and editing. When a character is reading a book intently, she is "pouring" over the book; perhaps the author meant "poring". When a character finds another's conduct bad, the first character is "enamored"; perhaps the author meant "not enamored". When a character finds something interesting, he is "peaked"; perhaps the author meant interest was "piqued". I could go on and on, but these are just a few example of lazy writing. If the plot and dialog weren't so stilted, I could forgive minor errors, but I was stuck with this novel on an airplane. By the way, the author in his "Acknowledgments" spends most of his words on himself, even describing himself as the "undisputed king of series fiction" and denies drinking vodka while writing this book. I kid you not. Finally, the initial reviewer has a few errors in her comments. The first character mentioned was not Laura Graham, but Larina Gahram. The black FBI agent was not Darwin Williams, but Darwin Reynolds.
