REVIEW OF RUDIN REAL AND COMPLEX ANALYSIS SOLUTIONS

• I have been reading Mexican/Southwest cookbooks for years. I own 1, 'The Herb Garden Cookbook' by Lucinda Hutson, wonderful book. 'Fiesta Mexicali' will be the next one, as soon as my tax stimulus check comes:) I just got this from the library, very impressed, easy to read, fun, neat comments, easy recipes with ingredients we can find, craft tips, booze, etc. Fun book, no clue how I missed it all these years but it will be mine soon.

• In The Angels, the third part of The Book of Laughter and Forgetting, Milan Kundera criss-crosses the tale of two American girls attempting to impress their teacher by putting a spin on a class presentation with an account of his brief career as an astrologist during his last days in his homeland of Czechoslovakia, two anecdotes that have no relevance to one another, or do they? The goal of this lucid, experimental novel (described as "a meditation on existence as seen through the medium of imaginary characters") seems to be identifying the hidden coincidences and thematic unities of life itself. To accomplish this task, Mr. Kundera has disregarded the traditional definition of the novel and has composed a narrative that is unified in spirit and themes, rather than in time and place. A new cast of characters is drawn-up for each of the seven parts (with only one who populates two sections) but the same subject matter (laughter, understanding, remembrance, forgetting, spiritual and emotional transcendence) unifies the opus. Meanwhile small dashes of historical anecdotes, personal accounts and philosophical musings are added to further explore the themes. The resulting work is absolutely unique, wholly engaging and remarkably insightful.
