REVIEW OF LEARNING LENORMAND TRADITIONAL FORTUNE TELLING FOR MODERN LIFE

- Peter H. Capstick and Peter Allison write about the same animals in the same countries. But their stories are very different. In Allison's world the charging elephant stops at the last moment, in Capstick's world it doesn't. It's good to know both. You learn something from both. I have nothing but contempt for shooters who come to Africa and are driven to a spot from which they can safely shoot animals while surrounded by armed guides. The whole "hunt" may take just a few hours. I've seen Americans "hunting" this way in South Africa. I greatly respect people like Capstick who risk their lives. And know how to tell stories with important details, like the fact that you need bloodshot eyes because animals can see clear eyes from a long distance.
- If you like Peter Capstick you will like this book. He has a way of putting you there with the rest of his crew. I've read all but two of his books and have yet to find one that I didn't like....this one is no exception.
