REVIEW OF TACHO PRO MANUAL

- A sixteen year old, high-spirited Kit Tyler, sails from the beautiful islands of Barbados. When she sees the town of Wethersfield, she feels like a bird that has flown to the wrong part of the world. She feels completely free in the meadows where she enjoys the company of the old Quaker woman and on occasion her young sailor friend Nat. Kit's friendship with the "witch" is discovered, she is accused of having studied witchcraft!

- When Edgar Rice Burroughs began writing his Barsoom series, people didn't know a lot about Mars except that it seemed to have canals. So Burroughs came up with his own elaborate fantasy world, populated by green barbarians, airships, multi-legged beasts and giant hairy white apes. Buttkicking ex-soldier John Carter is a bit of a Gary Stu, but at least he's a pleasant one -- and Burroughs fleshes out his imaginary Mars with loving skill, coming up with alien fauna and cultures that really resemble nothing on Earth. During an Apache attack, ex-Confederate soldier John Carter takes shelter in a cave... and wakes on a strange alien world. He soon discovers that he's somehow been transported to the planet Mars (or Barsoom), and is apprehended by the barbaric green Martians of Thark, who do not understand love or friendship. But thanks to gravity and his own skills, John Carter is able to gain the respect of the Tharks, and even becomes a chieftain. But the Tharks capture Dejah Thoris, a princess of the more humanlike red Martians. John Carter soon falls in love with her. As their safety is threatened by a small conspiracy of extra-cruel Tharks, Carter starts plotting to escape to the Red Martian city of Helium. But escape turns out to be the least of his problems when he becomes embroiled in the complex politics of two different Martian races. While "A Princess of Mars" is a fun sci-fi adventure, the real draw here is Barsoom -- a wild, cruel world filled with fantastical beasts and colorful flora. A good chunk of the book is devoted just to showing Carter (and us) its cultures, flora, fauna, mores, mythology and a history that Burroughs clearly spent a lot of time on. It takes awhile for the plot to get revved up (seriously, it takes FOREVER for them to leave Thark), but once it does, it's quite brilliant. And Burroughs writes in a solid pulp style. He spends too much on analyzing the green Martian culture, but he also splatters the story with plenty of big acrobatic fight scenes, high-speed battles, and evocative descriptions of the wild, desertlike world of Barsoom and how very strange it is. And as he explores the ways in which the Martians are different from humans, Burroughs produces some very heartfelt, emotional moments, such as Sola telling Carter about her mother. John Carter is admittedly kind of a Gary Stu -- he's a noble soldier who is stronger and more acrobatic than anyone else on the planet, a gorgeous princess falls for him, and he instantly becomes an important figure in two different warring cultures. I should hate him. However, he's at least a LIKABLE Gary Stu, relatively humble and quick to help other people. Dejah Thoris is not fleshed out quite so well (except in the wink-wink-nudge-nudge way), but the Green Martians are surprisingly complex creatures -- they're raised to be cruel and loveless, but they are also noble and strong. Tal Tarkas and Sola are particularly well-developed characters, especially as Carter changes how they see the world. "A Princess of Mars" spends a long time exploring the world of Barsoom, before transforming into a rollicking sci-fi adventure tale. Just have the next book on hand before you finish.
