- This is an account from a Japanese physician. It is very interesting and I read it in one sitting from cover to cover. The author focuses on the medical aspect of what happened to the Japanese people in Hiroshima. Obviously, he was flying blind in trying to treat the people experiencing burns and radiation poisoning. He himself was terribly wounded by flying debris and glass, and spent a month recovering from his wounds. His anger at the Americans is quickly changed when he meets the concerned members of the American Occupation. Although interesting, this account lacks something. First of all, it is a narrow perspective of the Japanese suffering. One finds a lot of what happened medically. What happened psychologically? He describes the physical destruction overall. However, how did it affect the city and region as a whole. There are also some prominent misspellings throughout this copy. This is a documented account of what happens when man uses nuclear weapons. It is not a pretty picture. Our leaders should read this before we even think about the purchase or use of nuclear weapons. One also should think if these weapons ever came into the hands of rogue states (Iran) or terrorists. The authors describes the suffering of a population.

- This was one of my favorites when I was a child. It is so wonderful to share it with my five year old son. It contains a good moral lesson and interests kids in reading.
