REVIEW OF REFINERY FIRE INCIDENT A CASE STUDY OF A MULTIPLE

- This book, Red Sky At Morning by Richard Bradford, is set during the time of World War II when people all over the world were struggling and about a boy who learn to appreciate people of a different race. It is about a boy name Josh, who has been raised in the ways of Mobile, Alabama. His father, Frank Arnold is a wealthy ship builder, who gets his volunteer commission in the U.S navy. Frank decides to move his wife and 17-year-old josh to the family summerhouse in Corazon Sagrado, in the high mountains of New Mexico. Mrs. Arnold finds it hard to get by living in a highly populated Hispanic village. Josh on the other hand becomes a part of the Hispanic community. Josh goes to school at Helen De Crispin where he found many new friends and he is fascinated with the culture. The book talks about the people who come and change the life of josh, the people who influenced his progress to maturity. In New Mexico is where josh finds himself and where he finally understands the meaning of responsibility and love. This book really brings you back to the good old times, the times when we were curious about everything. Josh doesn't fit in much with the community, but after no time he shows interest and curiosity in his summerhouse. The village, the setting, and the people help him to find himself and find maturity. By the end of the book he is totally different from what he was when he just came to the village. This book should be read especially because people and teenagers especially can relate to it. A lot of people are going through life changing period and many teenagers can relate to this book. It can bring the older people back to their young and curiosity age. Every one should read this book.
