REVIEW OF WHITTLING WOODCARVING

- You know when talented Karen Ziemba does a reading that the listening will be first-rate. She does her usual exemplary turn with the latest from New York Times bestselling author Sandra Brown. It would seem that if life isn't perfect for Jordan Hadlock, it is very, very good. She's on an emotional upswing after an unhappy ending to her first marriage. She has a job she enjoys at an English newsstand in Lucerne. A picture perfect setting! Add another figure to this painting - rich and famous Swiss industrialist Helmut Eckherdt wants very much to marry her. Reluctant to enter into another marriage Jordan has been delaying Helmut. She likes him, but she still isn't sure. Can a woman ever be truly sure? A partial answer to that question comes to her doorstep one rainy night: handsome Reeves Grant is seeking shelter from a torrential downpour. He finds more than shelter in Jordan's arms. However, upon awakening the next morning Jordan finds him gone. Reeves is gone, but not forgotten in Jordan's mind and heart. Later when she serves as hostess at an upscale dinner party hosted by Helmut, the industrialist announces that the two will soon be wed. A photojournalist is there to record the announcement - it is Reeves. As the day of her wedding approaches, Jordan finds herself often thrown together with Reeves. Each encounter leads to a wellspring of emotions. Should she follow her heart or her mind? - Gail Cooke

- From the very first chapter, the author made it seem like he was speaking directly to me. This book is definitely for someone who is interested in Costume Design and wants to know absolutely everything about it, in detail (not for someone already in the field and familiar with how it works). It's not just a book that I'll read and then retire to my bookshelf. As I continue to aspire to be a costume designer, this book will stay by my side for a long time. The ideas he gives you in the first chapter on how to break down the script is easy to learn, with practice. I urge anyone who is interested in this field to buy this book first.
