REVIEW OF CHAPTER 7 GREAT GATSBY QUOTES

- I look at Teri's book differently than others. I see first-hand evidence of distasteful effects of low dosage nuclear radiation. Teri mentions that in a few sq mile area where she grew up, a large % of people have died, or are suffering side effects, of nuclear fallout. I knew, or know, all of the people she refers to in these passages. I married a girl from there and I attended funerals for some of the victims. I am a 'downwinder'. I am not part of the class-action lawsuit that is finally going to court this month (May, 2005). But, I am still a downwinder. I suffer from acute thyroid disease, have battled cancer successfully and poor eyesight as a result of I-131 exposure (my conclusion). Teri's mortality and disease incidence data are statistically significant at $p < 0.01$ level. I hope this book motivates people to learn more about how and why a government will not accept responsibility or guilt for its actions in situations such as this.

- My most recent discovery is from the Science Fiction / Fantasy section of the bookstore, "Nanny Ogg's Cookbook" by Terry Pratchett. The author of the book is the author of a fantasy series entitled Discworld, where elves and witches inhabit the world, with a largely satirical approach. Nanny Ogg is one of Discworld's main character witches. The cookbook is very funny and mainly British cuisine, which may explain why this book was so hard to find in the USA. The recipes are entirely in metric and some of the ingredients would be unknown to the average American cook. Yet, the book is lovely! There is even a section on the table manners of dwarves, pixies, trolls and scarecrows! Some of the recipes in this book that you may be interested in trying are: Mrs. Gogol's Clairvoyant Gumbo, Traveller's Digestives, Strawberry Wobbler and Sergeant Angua's Vegetable Stew With Dumplings.

If you are a fan of Discworld, or are interested in an amusing, yet interesting stab at being a cookbook, then try this one.
