REVIEW OF THE PROPHETIC MINISTRY EAGLE MISSIONS

- I say that The Last Juror is better than the last two novels he came out with. Now The Last Juror is not another Grisham novel with a young lawyer in trouble or knows a secret he knows and takes the money and run to a nice island to Grand Cayman Islands. The Last Juror takes place in the 70's in Ford County; Grisham returns to Ford County since the release A Time To Kill. Now this time, instead of a lawyer, a newspaper writer gets into the murder and trial for the murder of Rhonda by Danny Padgett who Rhonda didn't accept a dance from him, so he murdered her in front of her children. Now, Wiley (the owner of Ford County Times) grabs the trial and is there from the beginning to the end. Danny is eventually sent to prison in life; in the 70's life only meant 8 years, during the post-trial, Wiley keeps reporting the local stories, hangs out with a couple of Vietnam Vets who love poker, yet they always invite Wiley to play since he always loses. It is then that Danny is released from prison, and goes on a killing spree when he told the jury that sentenced him to life, three juror's are killed, and immediately Danny is fingered for the killings of the jurors. At first the book starts out slow, slow like A Painted House slow, but Grisham lets the story simmer and the last 50 pages I thought were the best he has ever written. If you are looking for a good book that is slow, but yet suspensul? Get this book!

- This work is confused. McNerny tries to separate the logic of analogy from its real foundation in being. His criticisms of Cajetan just don't seem to hit the mark. The confusion can be summed up in his statement that "analogy" is itself used analogously. Well, if there is not some sense in which "analogy" is used univocally, then "analogy" loses any definite meaning. It becomes simply the night in which all cows are black. If you want to read something better by McNerny, read his translation and commentary on Aquinas' Disputed Question on Virtue. Ethics appears to be his forte.
