REVIEW OF AN INTRODUCTION TO ETHNIC CONFLICT GBV

- I read this book because I wanted to see the movie. I went into it with no expectations. I was surprise to find out what a delight it was. I was so engrossed in the book, I finished it within a few hours. It's clearly a piece of wonderful work. I have started to read Alice Hoffman's other novels and I am enjoying each one, but not as much as I enjoyed Practical Magic.

- I love this book! More importantly, my five year old loves it. I was looking for a book to read next to him, a little each day. He is in that awkward stage of reading where he knows his letters and reads small words on a worksheet well, but can't just pick up and read a story to himself. He kind of stumbles over Dr. Seuss, etc, and it goes real slow. Anyway, I saw this book recommended by a homeschooling catalog and went for it. It is perfect for this use-- the next logical step after Dick and Jane. Each lesson gets slightly harder, but they are short... a little excerpt each day with a fun photo picture as a caption. Even my four year old comes around to hear her little brother read it. Plus it has a word box at the top with pronunciation guide, so you can make sure your little one knows all the words before they start to read the excerpt. It's like a paragraph long, but formatted well on the page so if your reader balks at "normal" page layout (i.e. is afraid of a grown-up paragraph), it is friendly enough for them to try it. The stories are cute too, of little girls and boys, and their pets/outings. Nothing exciting but nothing objectionable either. By the time the book is done, your little one should be reading pretty much like a second/third grader. But more importantly, they feel like they read their first, real chapter book all on their own. This is a great motivator and perfect for kids that seem like they'll never get from picture books to chapter books. Oh BTW, make sure you buy the newer version of this book with the cover listed here. The older version does not have the neat pictures in it.
