REVIEW OF SAMPLE CONCEPT PAPER

- Paul Tillich examines anxiety. Fear is different from anxiety in that fear is directed at a specific object whereas anxiety is not. Anxiety is not directed at a specific object because it comes from the threat of nonbeing. Our nonbeing exists at three levels the ontic, spiritual and moral. Ontic anxiety is experienced as anxiety of fate and ultimately of death. Spiritual anxiety is experienced as emptiness and ultimately as meaninglessness. Moral anxiety is experienced as rejection and ultimately as condemnation. He makes a distinction between normal anxiety and pathological anxiety. The neurotic may be more aware of his own non being and more creative. Normal anxiety is sometimes replaced by fear of a specific object which can be handled better by the individual. He next examines Existentialisms. Existentialisms as a point of view started with Plato and the distinction between the essential forms and actual existence. Classical Christianity continued in the Existential point of view with man being created good in essence but due to sin and the fall became estranged from this essence. The Existentialisms of the 20th century was driven by the anxiety of meaninglessness. The main event that caused this shift in the 20th century was the loss of God.
