REVIEW OF HANDBOOK OF SEVENTH DAY ADVENTIST THEOLOGY COMMENTARY

- When we first started reading "The Stranger" in class our teacher warned us it would be a boring book, but as I read the first half unlike most of my classmates and my teacher I found "The Stranger" quite interesting. I know someone in my life who is just as strange as Mersault, the protagonist of this book is and it was quite interesting to get a first hand view of an unemotional, amoral, apathetic person. But things got worse when the entire second half of the book turned out to be a trial description. If there is any type of book I hate, it is that of a trial description. But however boring the book might be it is one of the most influential books I have ever read. It is an existentialist book that views the world as an absurd and indifferent place. The world according to this book is a "Godless" place where nobody cares about the people that dwell in it. "The Stranger" is one of the pioneer books in the genre of existentialist books that deal with the absurdity of life. In today's materialistic society, this book seems to make a lot of sense when the codes of religion do not seem to suffice our spiritual needs anymore, when the entire world seems to be apathetic to its surroundings, busy and confined to their own lives. Yes, indeed it is an absurd world that we live in and it is about this world that Camus writes "The Stranger" about. Camus also satirizes the hypocrisy and fakeness of religion and the legal system and how often they are merged together as one. "The Stranger" by Camus ranks up there with the classics, and even though it might not keep our utmost attention throughout the reading it definitely however teaches us a valuable lesson in life.

- The minute I heard "existentialist literature" I was rather fearful of this book. I took it on vacation recently and read it cover to cover in about five hours. It is interesting because the main character, Monsieur Meursault, is absolutely detached as a human being. Typically, I would find such a concept rather boring, but somehow his ideas and actions are such a train wreck that I could not tear myself away. In a rather small way, it reminded me a bit of "Crime and Punishment" by Fyodor Dostoevsky in that a man murders another, and pays the price, yet never understands the magnitude of his crime because he believes "nothing really matters" in this world. Meursault's is a rather frightening philosophy, but somehow just disturbing and seemingly nonchalant enough to keep one poring over it until the end is met (in more ways than one). This was a book that read rather like a movie playing in my head, and though it's far from "charming," it certainly does make you wonder at the foibles of man. If you are like me, you will be shaking your head and saying, "No Way!....Better him than me!" It is a quick read and one that is heavily prescribed in high schools and colleges nationwide. Give it a try! It's a classic.
