REVIEW OF POETI ITALIANI DEL NOVECENTO BY PIER VINCENZO MENGALDO

- I would like to give this a 4 1/2 star rating. Three of the stories were great and one left something to be desired. The Countess's Pleasure by Emma Holly was very nice. I liked the imagination of the other race and the mix with Victorian times. It was an unusual choice to put together but it really worked. The Breed Next Door by Lora Leigh was my favorite. It was the shortest but the hottest. I would have loved to see this as a full length novel. Even with the constraints of the short story you got a sense of who and what Tarek was. Leigh was able to make me care for the 2 main characters in a short period of time. This calls for a sequel. Loved it! Falling for Anthony by Meljean Brook was, to me, the weakest of the 4 stories. It is the only reason I didn't give the book 5 stars. I felt that there was too much happening and too much detail to ever develop any feeling for the main characters. I got lost in story at times as there seemed to be so much happening with no follow-through of information. The Blood Kiss by Shiloh Walker was another strong short story. She was able to develop the characters and make you like them and care about them in a very short period of time. This is another story that calls for a sequel because of some of the very interesting secondary characters. Very nice story.

- I have read a lot of Irish history, have visited Ireland 3 times and never cease to be amazed at the character and resilience of the culture and history of the people of this great country. Ireland had a great culture and people long before England invaded over 800 years ago and has survived and even advanced to an amazing degree; despite all the cruelty and evil that England has imposed on her in an attempt to bring her into submission. Many books have been written about Ireland and particularly rebellions against England. Ireland was the first country that England took over in building her Empire and it appears that it will be the last country that she has been finally kicked out of. Little wonder, after the brutality that England has imposed on Ireland for all these years, the Union Jack is referred to as "The Butcher's Apron". Morgan Llywelyn is an excellent historical novelist, and has covered the history of Ireland in 5 novels; beginning with this one leading up to and about the Easter Rebellion in "1916", followed by the Civil War in "1921", the founding of the Irish Republic in "1949", the horrors of Bloody Sunday in "1972", and the latest "1999", a novel of the Celtic Tiger and the Search for Peace. She needs to write at least one more when all of the Island becomes "A Nation Once Again". Let's hope that will be sooner than later. I have all these books assembled and intend to read them in order. "1916" is a great read. It is written as clearly and interesting as can be possible. It is as well written as was Margaret Mitchell's "Gone With The Wind" was about the American Civil War. I find history about war and politics can be very involved, with an enormous amount of events, personalities, dates, etc. and often one has difficulty "seeing the trees for the forest". Llywelyn has the great skill of being able to write in a way that cuts through all the details and by using characters to show what and why things happened. This ability makes for a book that is so well written that it is hard to put down once the reader gets started. I found this a terrific read and now am looking forward to the others. If you want to understand modern day, or 20th Century Ireland; Morgan Llywelyn does it for you here. I visited Kilmainham Jail several years ago. A visit there and a listen to that unbelievably poignant song "Grace" about Grace Gifford and Joe Plunkett, burn into your heart the events of 1916 forever.
