REVIEW OF OXFORD GRAMMAR FOR EAP PDF NEEDLEORE

- I've read this book multiple times, the first being when I was in middle school, and what impresses me the most is that every time I read it, I find something new that makes me stop and think. This time around, I stopped to think about the concept of everything having "sameness". My first instinct was to compare the society of The Giver to that of a Communist society, but the main themes go further than that. In The Giver, the society strove to repress all memories, painful or otherwise, in order to form a more perfect world. But would this really serve an important purpose? I think even if the world could somehow convert itself into an equal playing field for everyone, the lack of independence and personal choice would stifle society's ability to function. It's an interesting concept. I also think the reader can draw comparisons from the society to today's. The emphasis on the Twelves to pass from childhood to the adult world is comparable to today's high school senior. After that certain age, the child is left to make the decisions of their future and to train for the path they choose. There are many other such similarities throughout the novel as well. Overall, the book had an interesting concept and was quite thought-provoking. At times, the pace was a bit slow for my liking, and some of the events seemed rushed or out of place, but in general the book was very well-written. It was able to maintain an easy reading style while at the same time contained matter that adults could relate to. Plus, it's different than the traditional youth story. It truly makes you imagine the possibilities.

- A twelve year old kid name Jonas lives in a neighborhood with no crime or misery. Every bad thing that was in the neighborhood is taken out. All the adults get paired up with a person that would be a perfect couple with each other. When they have kids, the kids get assigned a job that would be perfect for them, than the Elders teach the kids how to do the job they were assigned, so when they are adults they will already know how to do their job. The problem with the neighborhood that the people think they have a life of perfection but really, they have no freedom because every single person has someone else decide what the people will and wont do. Jonas is chosen to be The Giver by the elders. The Giver is the person who holds the memories of before the neighborhood was supposed to be perfect. Jonas runs away from the neighborhood because he doesn't think anything should be perfect. The Giver was an O.K. book to me. This book was fiction, I recommend this book to people 12 and up and who like morals in stories and who like adventurous books.
