REVIEW OF MECHANICAL TOLERANCE STACKUP AND ANALYSIS PDF

- As I travel my own path in my life I find myself asking many of the same questions that Derrick asks himself and society in this book. My own frustrations found voice and there was a great sense of relief that perhaps a change in our culture may yet be on the way before we destroy all the things truly sacred in our lives. If only we could see that which is sacred apart from that which is in front of us. Highest recommendations if you are looking for the interrelationships of life. Deeply philisophical and bound to create more questions than answers. Yet without asking the right questions the answers are irrelevant. With warning as this book may change your soul, it did mine - and though the path is somewhat frightening - at the same time many burdens have been lifted from my spirit. Some of my favorite passages: "I know that beneath the fear and hatred, beneath the urge to control and destroy, far beneath the scarred shells that protect and define us, people are good. Deep down our needs are simple: apart from food, shelter, and clothing there are the needs to love and be loved, for community, to be open to the world at large and for it to be open to us, to affect and be affected, to understand and be understood, to hear and be heard, to accept and be accepted. It is only when we fear that these needs won't be met that we grasp at them, and in the grasping lose and chance of satisfying them. Love controlled is not love; just as sex demanded is rape and acceptance expected is subservience. But if we fear, that demand we must, for to fear these needs will not be met is to fear for our lives as surely as if our lack of love and acceptance were instead the absence of food and water. With these deep needs unsatisfied we waste away, shrivel and die as from hunger or thirst. We die, but we go on surviving. The search for that which should have been there all along continues, but we can no longer receive it, nor even recognize it." - P 98 "For nearly as long as I can remember, I've had the habit of asking people if they like their jobs. Over the years, about 90 percent - with the exception of my bosses at the NOAA - have said no. As I sat bored those days at my computer, I began to wonder what that percentage means, both socially and personally. I wondered what it does to each of us to spend the majority of our waking hours doing things we'd rather not do, wishing we were outside or simply elsewhere, wishing we were reading, thinking, making love, fishing, sleeping, or simply having time to figure out who the hell we are and what the hell we're doing. We never have enough time to catch up - I never knew what that meant, but it always felt as though I were running downhill, my body falling faster than my legs could carry me - enough time to try to understand what we want to do with the so very few hours each of us are given." - PP 108-109 "We are the relationships we share, we are that process of relating, we are, whether we like it or not, permeable - physically, emotionally, spiritually, experientially - to our surroundings" ... "I am only so beautiful as the character of my relationships, only so rich as I enrich those around me, only so alive as I enliven those I greet." - PP 126-127

- this story is very exciting. I'm glad that Crane disappeared at the end, whatever his destiny is. The Sleepy Hollow is so secluded and beautiful that we don't allow anyone to spoil the beauty there. I view Crane as an intruder of the Tarry town. People there take story-telling, especially the horrible stories, as a pastime. This brings them some excitement. I myself brought up in the rural area, I can understand this.
