REVIEW OF INTERMEDIATE ACCOUNTING CHAPTER 13 TEST BANK

- The stories in this collection largely take place in two settings: Houston and Montana. Since Bass was born and raised near Houston but now lives in Montana's Yaak Valley, that's not too much of a surprise. The themes often begin with questions of youth or aging, and the youthful stories are often set in Texas. However, we do meet one female character in both youth and old age, in both cases in a place much like western Montana (though not identified as such). Again, it's not surprising that an author of a certain age would be interested in playing with themes from his own youth in Texas and his middle age - - and coming senior years - - in Montana. All the characters and stories connect closely to the land. Around Houston, this land is often poisoned, sterile, overworked. In Montana, that's never true. In Texas, Bass also juxtaposes a gritty realism and bleak surroundings with elements of the surreal, a kind of Texan magical realism. That's doesn't seem necessary in Montana, where the characters are much better grounded in the land and in themselves. Thus, intertwined with youth and age are different environmental landscapes, the freshness of Montana and the sterility of Texas. Even when the title story focuses on a character confronting death in Montana, the story is full of life, while sexual coming-of-age in Texas is bleak and loveless. Altogether a remarkable collection.

- I read this book when I was a teenager in school, even saw the picture, but now after fifty years I think I enjoyed it much more. I highly recommend this book to those with a youthful spirit.
