REVIEW OF DENON AVR 1803 MANUAL

• Papanek, like his mentor Fuller, took on a guru like status where rhetoric became more important than the reality. He bends facts and contradicts himself several places in this book. Here are a few that jumped out at me Misrepresentation of the facts -Page 89 - The Hyatt collapse wasn't bad design rather the builder changed the construction and inspectors weren't doing their job. 281 - He talks about farm implement companies' negative reaction to his walking tractor proposal. Troy-Bilt Rototiller has around since 1937, was and is building a 10 HP tiller very similar to the one pictured. Contradicts himself -Page 6 he says, "Design must be meaningful. And meaningful replaces such semantically loaded expressions as ... "ugly"... "cute"...Page 93 - he describes gum as "tawdry"Page 246 - He asserts that humidifiers are bad because they are "costly, ugly, and ... wasteful of water" Granted there are a lot of dangerous, overpriced, impractical, and generally unnecessary products on the market, but except for ranting about what he considers to be wrong, he doesn't offer much in terms of direction to others who want to be socially responsible.

• This was just a travel log...almost just a daily journal. I expected a story line; a plot. It became more and more of the same, and less and less interesting. When it ended, I was shocked, and my response was, "that's it?"
